

A method for detecting single copies of a gene in-situ using brightfield microscopy is used in detection of nucleic acid sequences. Probes are directly or indirectly labeled with alkaline phosphatase with NBT/BCIP used as the chromogen.